Previous studies have documented ethnic differences in the prevalence of rickets in children. To determine if there were ethnic differences in the prevalence of 25-hydroxyvitamin D (25-OHD) insufficiency, deficiency, and rickets in children and adults. Cross-sectional analysis of data from the National Population Health Survey. Ontario, Canada, from January to June 2001. A total of 3032 persons. For children, the reference group was 0 to 6 years of age, and for adults, the reference group was 15 to 75 years of age. There was an overall difference between the 2 age groups, with the percentage of those with 25-OHD insufficiency and deficiency higher for adults than for children. Among the ethnic groups in Ontario, after adjusting for the percentage of Indians in Ontario, the odds ratios (95% CI) for 25-OHD deficiency and 25-OHD insufficiency were significantly greater for the First Nations, Métis, and Chinese than for the South Asian and Caucasian ethnic groups, with the First Nations and Métis groups having the highest odds ratios. Among those aged 15 to 75 years, the adjusted odds ratios (95% CI) for 25-OHD deficiency were 0.44 (0.30-0.65) for the Métis, 0.45 (0.32-0.66) for the
